Underline all of them within the series of sentences that you are seeing. Find the word that is making it all happen. You can circle them or show them in anyway that you choose to. If the bolded noun in each sentence is an action verb, label its role. If it does not serve this role, circle "no." Mrs. Willoughby watches us on Saturday nights. The word in this case is "watches". This worksheet floats a slightly higher level of vocabulary. Write what is actually taking place on the line that is provided for you? You will write the term of interest found in each sentence. Find the word that is doing something about it. These are quick and sweet. A nice way to do a mass review of this skill. This requires you to identify words and pick them out of the sentences. The robot stared at me. How many did you see in the past two sentences? Verbs express either action or a state of being. Another way to think of it is that a verb can express either a physical activity or a mental activity. We have you work with much longer sentences in this worksheet. This allows use to take this skill on to the next level. Some of these sentences have multiple actions to identify. Just take your time and identify all of them as you see. Some words will present as thoughts that are not tangible. A good way to approach these parts of speech is to spot movement of somekind. Read each sentence. Does the underlined word refer to an action or to a state/condition? Write your answer on the line. Fill in the blank in each sentence with an action verb of your choice. See how well you can perform this skill, now that you have had some practice at it. There are many different words in the English language that are used to describe what someone or something is doing. These are critical words to any sentence because they tell us what is going on. Without the presence of these words, the sentences do not make sense or offer much information to the reader. It can be things as simple as walking or complex as writing a fractional algorithm to solve a world health crisis. Any time a single word is used to describe what a subject is doing; we refer to that word as an action verb. In addition to these words being able to describe a physical action they can also be used to describe mental things and things we cannot see taking place such as thinking or feeling. These types of words come in many different tenses and should be examined in depth to best know which form of the word is the most fitting. You cannot express a complete thought without using a verb. They are an essential part of a complete sentence. These parts of speech are added to a sentence to describe an action that can be done by a person, an animal, a thing, or even nature. For example, a bartender pouring a drink, a dog barking, a kite flying, or the wind blowing are all action verbs. You will often use them to answer this type of question: Can I DO that? Consider this example: Sophia updated her resume before leaving the office. Are 'resume' or 'before' things you can do? Can you 'office'? What about 'updated' and 'leaving'? Can you update? Can you leave? Of course, you can! So updated and leaving are both action verbs in this sentence. Examples of Action Verbs The crowd exploded with cheers when the Queen appeared on the palace's balcony and waved. In this sentence, exploded, appeared, and waved are all examples of action verbs. The football team stared gloomily out of the window as the rain ruined their match. Here, the words stared and ruined serve this purpose in an impactful manner. Gregory wanted a horse for his birthday, but his parents could only afford horse-riding lessons. In this sentence, wanted and afford are examples of action verbs. The marathon runners forced themselves to move faster as soon as they caught sight of the finish line. Here, forced, move, and caught are all serving this role that describe the runners' actions.
